CHELSEA

Woman Hunter in New Brunswick Woods Sends Word of Big Success.

William S. Hood has just received word from the wife of Bathurst, New Brunswick, that his daughter, Mrs. Gail Wood Palmer, who has been on a camping and hunting expedition there with her husband, Dr. Geo. J. Heimer, has had the great sport of bringing down a big bull moose at 240 yards and thus demonstrating a happy combination of steady nerve and good marksmanship.

The gallant monarch of the forest that succumbed to her deadly aim was one of the largest secured in that section for many years, his antlers being fifty-five inches from tip to tip and having eighteen prongs. She shot him from a position about twelve feet from the ground in a tree, ambushed in what is known among moose hunters as a "crows' nest." The doctor has also got a moose, but not so big a specimen as that secured by Mrs. Heimer.

Mrs. Frank H. Tracy, who was called here last week to attend the funeral of H. E. Dearborn, returned to her home in Montpelier, Saturday.

The New Moyen-Age Dress

We have just received a large line of Ladies' Wool Dresses. These are not the old kind of a house dress but a style that was worn in the Middle Ages and is a neat, trim style and of the popular cloths.

Ladies' Wool Dresses

A very popular Moyen Age Dress made of a fine all wool cassimere is made with the long plait back, and fitted down over the hips, and a full-plaited skirt; sleeve is made with plait over yoke, finished with buttons; has a lace yoke.

Another good value in a Moyen Age Dress is made of a fine quality invisible stripe panama. Is made with a lace collar and yoke, has a Gibson effect over shoulder, sleeves, yoke and front are finished with a satin fold. Has the long fitted lines, and plaits set into skirt about half way down each side.

A dress which is sure to meet with good favor is made of a fine quality chiton panama, is made Moyen Age style with plaits over shoulder. Has lace yoke and the new sleeve. Long lines in skirt with plaited skirt.

See these New Wool and Silk Dresses in our show window, and come in and try one on and you will be surprised at their fit and finish.
